Fabian and Brittany knew what it would take to make it in the service industry on their own. Being apart of many waitstaffs over the past 6 years, they wanted to become owners of their own business, creating a product that would be loved by many.

Fabian had been making kettle corn in Phoenix for years, and after marrying his wife, Brittany, decided to branch out on his own creating his company, Mainely Kettle Korn. Although 2009 has been their first year in the food business, and a difficult year at that, they can't think of anything else they would rather do for "work."

Brittany, being a native of Maine, wanted to come back to her home town and try doing what she thought nearly impossible. Bring her husband along and start a business being in her early 20's, and be successful at it. With high hopes of mixing North East ideas and South Western recipes, Brittany and Fabian now live in the small town of East Knox with their golden retriever Rossie.
